Pre-requisite To install Photoshop on Mac OS X, you must first have the OS X system already installed on your machine. Macs are sold with a pre-installed OS X but you can always load a separate OS X on a Mac with Mac OS X. Download & Installation To download and install Photoshop for Mac, you'll need to use the latest version of OS X, which at the time of writing is 10.10.2. You can download Photoshop for free from the Mac App Store by searching for Photoshop. You can also download it from Adobe.com. What you need 1. Adobe Photoshop CS6 or newer 2. OS X 10.6 (Snow Leopard) or newer 3. About a half hour Step-by-step Plug in your computer to a power source. Take out the mouse and keyboard. Close the lid on your computer. The monitor goes into sleep mode when the lid is closed. Press and hold the power button on the back of the computer. When you see the Apple logo, release the power button. Wait two seconds, and the computer is on. Hold Command-R to reload your startup items. Open the Mac App Store app and search for the Adobe Photoshop app icon. The Photoshop app icon should come up in the search results. Click on the icon, which will open up the App Store. Click on Downloads. Click on the "Install" button. Wait for the app to finish installing. Once you've waited until the app has finished installing, reboot your computer. Go into Finder and open up your Applications folder. Open up the new Photoshop.app and it'll load. Close the Photoshop application. Install the Adobe Creative Cloud app Note that, with the new Creative Cloud app and the subsequent service, you don't need to install a separate Photoshop app. Go to the App Store and download the Creative Cloud app. Go to the App Store. Search for the Creative Cloud app icon. Click the app icon and then on Install. Once the app is installed, launch the app. Click the Start App button in the top-right corner of the application. Once you're in the app, select Applications, then Updates.

There has been a noticeable uptick in Mandarin language instruction in the United States in recent years. The U.S. Department of Education reports that, as of 2007, 14% of all university students in the U.S. studied a foreign language. To reach such a high percentage, U.S. universities must be attracting applicants from abroad. This, in turn, can only be attributed to the attractive job market in China, as well as a dramatic increase in Chinese immigration to the U.S. Chinese immigrants in the U.S. are enrolling in Chinese language courses at much greater rates than native-born Americans. In 1990, 18.1% of foreign-born persons aged 25 and over had completed either high school or the equivalent, which was only 8.9% in 1995. Given the high level of Chinese immigration to the U.S., it is reasonable to assume that the percentage of Chinese students taking Chinese language courses is rising. In July 2007, Newsweek cited a report from Princeton University stating that, of the 72 million Chinese entering China's labor force in the coming decade, an estimated 20 million will move to the U.S. This means that the number of new Chinese immigrants will surpass the number of immigrants from other countries, and be a major source of skilled Chinese workers for the U.S. labor market. Many of the Chinese students taking Chinese language classes are enrolled in colleges and universities. In 2007, for example, about four percent of students enrolled in higher education were enrolled in Chinese language programs. As of fall 2005, there were 266,000 students from China studying in higher education in the U.S. Moreover, there are more Chinese students studying English than in any other country. Since Chinese students tend to hold high levels of English proficiency, the strong demand for English courses in Chinese universities has created an abundance of English language instructors. This is why, as of November 2007, Chinese language programs accounted for 23.6% of all foreign language programs (including bilingual and trilingual programs) at U.S. colleges and universities. Second, Chinese-language schools in the U.S. are attracting English-speaking students from all over the world. While Chinese students dominate the foreign language programs, other students from Hong Kong, Vietnam, Russia and all parts of China are enrolled in English language programs as well. Third, the Chinese government is encouraging Chinese students in the U.S. to study English. China's Ministry of Education and International Exchange

Q: Is there a way to perform a string operation on an anonymous string (e.g.: \r) I have a PHP function that loads a database and outputs a string of results. I am trying to perform a string operation on the result to remove carriage returns. I know that I can simply unset str_replace (e.g. str_replace('\r', '', $data)); but is there a way to perform a string operation on a string that is not defined by PHP? Ideally I would like to be able to modify the result of $res = 'blah blah\r blah blah'; to something like $res = 'blah blah'; If this can be accomplished using the String lib functions, this would be fantastic as I have many similar situations where this could be useful. A: What about preg_replace(): $res = preg_replace('/(\r|)/', '', $res); String functions are not designed for this kind of task. They are designed to work with string data, not with random splats of string that you want to replace with a different kind of data. Beaufort, South Carolina Beaufort is a city in and the county seat of York County, South Carolina, United States. As of the 2010 census, the city population was 25,026. It is the largest city in South Carolina that lies completely within a single U.S. state. History The site of the town was inhabited by Native Americans for thousands of years. The first European-American settlers arrived in the 1730s, and the name Beaufort is a reference to the nearby Charles-Towne, in what was then the Province of North Carolina, which was founded in 1663 by Charles II of England. After the American Revolutionary War (1775–83), French explorer Pierre D'Iberville landed at Beaufort Bay in 1779, claiming the area for France. After the United States succeeded in establishing the United States as a sovereign nation, Robert Smalls was born on Smalls Island in Beaufort. Fort Moultrie, a major fortification on Sullivan's Island, was the first permanent fort built in what was then North Carolina. It was built in 1734, in advance of what would become the city of Beaufort. Beaufort was the site of the
